

THE SUHRE SERIES

The warmer months are in arm's reach – finally. There's something about Spring that makes us all want to travel more. If you're thinking of jet setting to one of your bucket list locations or simply hopping on a plane for a business trip, be aware of the rules and regulations of consuming alcoholic beverages while in flight.

Many people like to have an alcoholic beverage on the plane. However, you should never drive after drinking on a plane. Did you know a DUI on airport property could result in state or federal charges? In Ohio, it is illegal for someone to operate or be in physical control of a vehicle with a BAC of .08% or higher. The federal code defers to state law if the state has more restrictive limits on BAC levels for DUI. In short, airport police or any law enforcement officer with jurisdiction can arrest you for DUI after drinking on a flight if you violate the applicable laws.

Punishments for a DUI in an Ohio airport can vary. A DUI is a Class B misdemeanor if you are charged under federal law. The penalty is up to six months in jail and a fine of up to $5,000. The judge could defer to state law if the penalty for drinking while driving conviction is harsher under federal DUI laws. Criminal penalties for an Ohio DUI conviction first offense is jail time of three days to six months and up to $1,075 in fines.

While it is not illegal to be drunk on an airplane, what you do while intoxicated could be a federal crime. You violate federal law if you interfere with a crew member or flight attendant while performing their job duties, assault or intimidate a crew member/flight attendant or considerably lessen a crew member's or flight attendant's ability to perform their job. The behaviors that qualify as interfering or intimidating are broad.

To summarize, if you happen to consume an alcoholic beverage or two on your next flight, be mindful of the legal parameters that could come with it if you choose not to drink responsibly. Don't sacrifice your freedom and finances for temporary fun in flight.
